When we talk about “next-level” food, we’re talking about going beyond the common things we do at home. We want to help you boost your impact by influencing behaviour throughout your neighbourhood, through initiatives that alter people’s outlooks, habits and relationships (with food, and each other!).

This includes reducing food waste, a major element of our footprints. This is a big issue, with a lot of room for improvement: from the resources used in food production or wasted along the length of supply chains, to energy consumed in the manufacture of food, to packaging and plastic bags, to our own and aesthetic expectations about how food should look in the supermarket.

NEXT-LEVEL FOOD

Consuming differently means questioning the impacts our consumption has on other people and the planet—and whether we even need certain things at all.

Find fun ways to share, reuse, repair and repurpose your stuff instead!
Why “good stuff”?

Everyone needs to consume enough to survive and thrive, but we also want to shift towards healthy, happy lifestyles that have less impact on the planet.

The energy and materials that go into making the goods we use have the greatest impact on our ecological footprints. So while recycling is great, it’s more important to reduce our overall consumption of goods — through re-thinking, sharing, repairing and reusing. This applies to clothing, sports gear, appliances, tools, toys, cars and so much more.

DID YOU KNOW?

In Southwest BC, 90% of the total impact of our “stuff” comes from the energy and materials used to make and ship products.

How to take action

You may already be doing things in your daily life that model the change you want to see. Practicing these at home and starting a conversation with your neighbours is powerful. But remember, to have an even bigger impact, you’ll want to engage others as well!

Key questions to ask

◊ Are there ways to talk differently about consuming — with your family, friends and neighbours — to shift away from a focus on material wealth towards other ideas of wellbeing and progress?

◊ How can your neighbourhood make meaningful changes in the overall level of stuff consumed? How will you measure that?

◊ How can you be inclusive of community members whose basic consumption needs aren’t being met?

◊ Which aspects of the local economy could be transformed to move away from emphasizing continuous growth and harmful consumption?

Online sharing apps and sites like Bunz and Ruckify, as well as Facebook Marketplace and Buy Nothing groups, help you trade, buy and sell unwanted items for things you need. These apps can facilitate meetups for swaps and sales.

Refillable product suppliers are skyrocketing in popularity, empowering engagement in zero waste lifestyles. Check out Fulfill Shoppe, Nada and The Refillery in the Fraser Valley; West Coast Refill and Nezza Naturals in Victoria; The Soap Dispensary, Greenworks Building Supply and Refill Road in Vancouver, and Port Moody Refillery.

Clothing donations and swaps help people breathe new life into old clothes, reducing fast fashion. Check out Think Thrice and the City of Abbotsford Fix-It and Swap Events.

Lending libraries like The Thingery, and shared spaces like Makerspaces, are fun ways to borrow things when you need them and to acquire repair knowledge and other skills. Victoria's Tool Library enables you to borrow rather than buy tools.

Zero waste campaigns like Trash Is For Tossers and My Plastic-Free Life promote engagement with low-waste lifestyles, while strategies like the City of Vancouver's Single-Use Item Reduction Strategy provide government support for minimizing waste.
Metro Van Repair Cafés

These days, it’s often cheaper to replace broken items than to repair them. But as we seek to live lighter and reduce our footprints, we need to rethink how we value our “stuff.” This includes investing in durable, longer-lasting goods while maintaining existing items as long as possible.

At free repair café events, people bring in their broken or damaged items, and experienced “fixer” volunteers (often older people) share their skills to help repair them. Repair cafés support community members who may not be able to invest in new purchases, and also eliminate the need to own a lot of tools.

In Vancouver, Metro Van Repair Cafés offer fixing stations for items from small appliances to textiles, jewellery and bikes. At the Tinkerbell Station, kids can tinker with broken items, highlighting that curiosity and creativity are at the heart of repair. In 2020, MetroVan Repair Cafés engaged 136 volunteers and repaired 230 damaged or broken items (a 62% average repair rate). They hope to bring the events to all communities across the city.
